Our favorite classical scholar returns!

“Christian Beginnings” is now a hot topic in scholarship as historians revisit the early Church and look for new ways to understand the greatest phenomenon in western history—how a small Syrian cult became a state, indeed universal, religion. Prof. Bart Ehrman of Chapel Hill has brought this subject to a wider audience with his best selling books, popular lectures, and TV appearances, in which he expresses considerable doubt—to say the least—about the historicity of Jesus’ ministry, the reliability of the Gospels, and the motives of early Christians. He has recently been featured in a series of four DVDs in which he airs his controversial views. So ours will be a kind of “Point—Counterpoint” program, in which we will watch his DVD presentations and compare them with the traditional and orthodox understandings of the early Church. Subjects to be “debated” will be the Passion Story, Biblical authority, Paul and the Church’s missionary outreach, relations with Jews and Romans, early heresies, persecutions, and the aftermath of Constantine’s conversion.

BIOGRAPHY

Dr. Howard Clarke is a professor emeritus of Classics and Comparative Literature from UCSB. His Ph.D. is from Harvard, and when specializing in ancient epic he authored and edited five books on Homer and Vergil. Since his retirement in 1991 he has worked in early Church history and in 2003 published a book on Matthew's Gospel.

Early Christians used the Greek word ichthus, "fish," as an acrostic based on the initial letters of the words "Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour."

Feeding Christians to the lions was thought to be entertainment in Ancient Rome
